

[quote="luvmywife"]forget the first image.[/quote]
Does that mean that following my instructions you are able to edit the original PDF that you first posted but that was not your problem after all? (Sorry to go back to that but there's no way to know what to do if we don't follow an organized route of inquiry, you being there and me being here, wherever here may be...) [quote="luvmywife"]FYI, I am scanning the hardcopy via a photocopy/scanner which automatically creates PDFs on my Win computer. This is the source of my PDFs[/quote] Unless you have some very fancy OCR software this method will [b][u]NEVER[/u][/b] generate editable text, even though it might as a matter of course wrap the image in a PDF wrapper. End of story. Once again, I need to know that the first PDF you posted (I just can't forget it! :)) was not generated in this manner, correct? Did you post it by mistake?
[quote]Every PDF I open in Inkscape is an image with the black arrows on the outside of the image.[/quote] Can we stick to one file so we are all on the same ... ahem... page?

[quote="luvmywife"]Forget the first image.[/quote] Does that mean that following my instructions you are able to edit the original PDF that you first posted but that was not your problem after all? (Sorry to go back to that but there's no way to know what to do if we don't follow an organized route of inquiry, you being there and me being here, wherever here may be...) [quote="luvmywife"]FYI, I am scanning the hardcopy via a photocopy/scanner which automatically creates PDFs on my Win computer. This is the source of my PDFs[/quote]
Unless you have some very fancy OCR software this method will [b][u]NEVER[/u][/b] generate editable text, even though it might as a matter of course wrap the image in a PDF wrapper. End of story. Once again, I need to know that the first PDF you posted (I just can't forget it! :)) was not generated in this manner, correct?
Did you post it by mistake?